

Vr293SU20 Chinese American Literature

Prof. Andrew Yang

May 13, 2020

PLEASE UPDATE ZOOM

Wong & Xu, "The Auntie"

- What does Maya want?
- What's getting in her way?
- What do the other characters in Part I want?
- What's getting in their way?
- Why does this comic portray the Auntie as a ghost? What is the ghost a metaphor of in this story (Part I)?

Is auntie HC
a ghost?
grandpa is also.

Maya superstitions
thinking ghosts

Maya: peace, get rid of ghost = withering
ghost = withering

Parents - support, safety.

Southern Chinese practice

Suspicion → for ancestors set up real

Plagiarism Exercise

In 1935 Italy made a belated attempt to participate in the scramble for Africa by invading Ethiopia. It was clearly a breach of the covenant of the League of Nations for one of its members to attack another. France and Great Britain, as great powers, Mediterranean powers, and African colonial powers, were bound to take the lead against Italy at the league. But they did so feebly and half-heartedly because they did not want to alienate a possible ally against Germany. The result was the worst possible: the league failed to check aggression, Ethiopia lost her independence, and Italy was alienated after all.

Roberts, J. M. History of the World

Secondary Source

In 1935 Italy made a belated attempt to participate in the scramble for Africa by invading Ethiopia. It was clearly a breach of the covenant of the League of Nations for one of its members to attack another. France and Great Britain, as great powers, Mediterranean powers, and African colonial powers, were bound to take the lead against Italy at the league. But they did so feebly and half-heartedly because they did not want to alienate a possible ally against Germany. The result was the worst possible: the league failed to check aggression, Ethiopia lost her independence, and Italy was alienated after all.

When Italy invaded Ethiopia, it was clearly a breach of the covenant of the League of Nations; yet the efforts of England and France to take the lead against her were feeble and half-hearted. It appears that those great powers had no wish to alienate a possible ally against Hitler's rearmed Germany.

no citation, no
citation marker

content similar

Obvious Plagiarism

In 1935 Italy made a belated attempt to participate in the scramble for Africa by invading Ethiopia. It was clearly a breach of the covenant of the League of Nations for one of its members to attack another. France and Great Britain, as great powers, Mediterranean powers, and African colonial powers, were bound to take the lead against Italy at the league. But they did so feebly and half-heartedly because they did not want to alienate a possible ally against Germany. The result was the worst possible: the league failed to check aggression, Ethiopia lost her independence, and Italy was alienated after all.

When Italy invaded Ethiopia, it was clearly a breach of the covenant of the League of Nations; yet the efforts of England and France to take the lead against her were feeble and half-hearted. It appears that these great powers had no wish to alienate a possible ally against Hitler's rearmed Germany.

In 1935 Italy made a belated attempt to participate in the scramble for Africa by invading Ethiopia. It was clearly a breach of the covenant of the League of Nations for one of its members to attack another. France and Great Britain, as great powers, Mediterranean powers, and African colonial powers, were bound to take the lead against Italy at the league. But they did so feebly and half-heartedly because they did not want to alienate a possible ally against Germany. The result was the worst possible: the league failed to check aggression, Ethiopia lost her independence, and Italy was alienated after all.

3 words principle

paraphrasing

Under Mussolini in 1935, Italy made a belated attempt to participate in the scramble for Africa by invading Ethiopia. As J. M. Roberts points out, this violated the covenant of the League of Nations (Roberts 1976, p. 845). But France and Britain, not wanting to alienate a possible ally against Germany, put up only feeble and half-hearted opposition to the Ethiopian adventure. The outcome, as Roberts observes, was the worst possible: the league failed to check aggression, Ethiopia lost her independence, and Italy was alienated after all (Roberts 1976, p. 845).

intro. source

parental citation

↑
typo

quotations

Partial Plagiarism

In 1935 Italy made a belated attempt to participate in the scramble for Africa by invading Ethiopia. It was clearly a breach of the covenant of the League of Nations for one of its members to attack another. France and Great Britain, as great powers, Mediterranean powers, and African colonial powers, were bound to take the lead against Italy at the league. But they did so feebly and half-heartedly because they did not want to alienate a possible ally against Germany. The result was the worst possible: the league failed to check aggression, Ethiopia lost her independence, and Italy was alienated after all.

Under Mussolini in 1935, Italy made a belated attempt to participate in the scramble for Africa by invading Ethiopia. As J. M. Roberts points out, this violated the covenant of the League of Nations (Roberts 1976, p. 845). But France and Britain, not wanting to alienate a possible ally against Germany, put up only feeble and half-hearted opposition to the Ethiopian adventure. The outcome, as Roberts observes, was “the worst possible: the league failed to check aggression, Ethiopia lost her independence, and Italy was alienated after all” (Roberts 1976, p. 845).

no 3 word violation original media

on a understanding

In 1935 Italy made a belated attempt to participate in the scramble for Africa by invading Ethiopia. It was clearly a breach of the covenant of the League of Nations for one of its members to attack another. France and Great Britain, as great powers, Mediterranean powers, and African colonial powers, were bound to take the lead against Italy at the league. But they did so feebly and half-heartedly because they did not want to alienate a possible ally against Germany. The result was the worst possible: the league failed to check aggression, Ethiopia lost her independence, and Italy was alienated after all.

Much has been written about German rearmament and militarism in the period 1933-1939. But Germany's dominance in Europe was by no means a foregone conclusion. The fact is that the balance of power might have been tipped against Hitler if one or two things had turned out differently. Take Italy's gravitation toward an alliance with Germany, for example. That alliance seemed so very far from inevitable that Britain and France actually muted their criticism of the Ethiopian invasion in the hope of remaining friends with Italy. They opposed the Italians in the League of Nations, as J. M. Roberts observes, "feebly and half-heartedly because they did not want to alienate a possible ally against Germany" (Roberts 1976, p. 845).

As my III
III
II

No Plagiarism

In 1935 Italy made a belated attempt to participate in the scramble for Africa by invading Ethiopia. It was clearly a breach of the covenant of the League of Nations for one of its members to attack another. France and Great Britain, as great powers, Mediterranean powers, and African colonial powers, were bound to take the lead against Italy at the league. But they did so feebly and half-heartedly because they did not want to alienate a possible ally against Germany. The result was the worst possible: the league failed to check aggression, Ethiopia lost her independence, and Italy was alienated after all.

Much has been written about German rearmament and militarism in the period 1933-1939. [thesis] But Germany's dominance in Europe was by no means a foregone conclusion. [support] The fact is that the balance of power might have been tipped against Hitler if one or two things had turned out differently. Take Italy's gravitation toward an alliance with Germany, for example. [application of Roberts] That alliance seemed so very far from inevitable that Britain and France actually muted their criticism of the Ethiopian invasion in the hope of remaining friends with Italy. They opposed the Italians in the League of Nations, as J. M. Roberts observes, "feebly and half-heartedly because they did not want to alienate a possible ally against Germany" (Roberts 1976, p. 845). [quotation used as support]

Plagiarism

- How can we avoid plagiarizing a text, if we use it extensively?
 - Focus on the idea, not the text
 - Discuss and critique it rather than accept it

Please see the “Queensland Examples Plagiarism” handout on Canvas and/or look at <http://www.usq.edu.au/library/referencing/what-is-plagiarism/examples>
for more information

Fair Use

- For educational or nonprofit purposes
- A limited amount of words in a work can be copied, and only one for your personal use. Sometimes an author or editor will state the amount of words upon your request.
- I can share the link for stories online, or at the author's request, I can share paper copies (1/student) for a story not available online.
- I cannot scan or provide electronic copies without the author's permission. Too easy to disseminate, lose control.

Fair Use

- It is not the author's, editor's, or publisher's job to police you (or the internet) for illegal copies and then hunt you down for punishment; it is your duty to treat the work with respect as intellectual property.
 - The Honor Code works the same way.
- Does the distribution of a work affect its target market? Does it take sales or royalties away from the original authors / publishers?

Remember – plagiarism is intellectual theft!
You are not taking something that is free for public use.
You are stealing something a real person has created and owns.

Comprehension Questions	Online Discussion – “Book Review”	Follow-up Discussion Posts
Fact-Based	Supported Opinions, Sentences	Close Readings, Interpretive Sentences
Individual	Discussion	May be Team-Based
6 / Term	4 Total	Required
Weight of Grade: Low	Weight of Grade: Medium	Weight of Grade: High